Set up options explained:

Theater

Chairs are set up in rows, all facing the front. This set-up is used primarily for meetings where attendees do not have to take notes. It is an ideal set-up option for showing presentations or for a non-interactive internet seminar or broadcast.

Classroom

Long (6' or 8') tables are set up in rows with 3 or 4 chairs at each table, all facing the front. This set-up is used mainly for meetings where people are expected to take notes. It is an ideal set-up option for interactive presentations or training.

Boardroom

Chairs are set up around a central table. This set-up is used mainly for formal meetings where people have to interact with each other and take notes. It is an ideal set-up option for group discussions. It is not ideal for presentations, as people are facing each other across a table.

U Shape

Chairs are set up around a series of tables set up in a U shape. This set-up is used mainly for meetings where people have to interact with each other and take notes. It is an ideal set-up option for a group discussion and a smaller presentation.

Hollow Square

Chairs are set up around a series of central tables, which form a hollow square inside the tables. This set-up is used mainly for formal meetings where people have to interact with each other and take notes. It is an ideal set-up option for larger group discussions. It is not ideal for presentations, as people are facing each other across a table.

Rounds

Chairs are set up around a series of circular tables throughout the room. This set-up is used mainly for banquets, weddings, dinners, or social dining events. It is also used for larger meetings or retreats, with participants turning chairs toward a speaker or audio-visual presentation.

Reception

Participants stand and mingle during a reception-style event. Tables are used only for food and beverage or group materials.
